“ Cindy is my good friend, counsellor and teacher. She is always kind, cheerful, sincere and loving. In times of my difficulties, Cindy always tried her best to comfort me, encourage me and provide all kinds of support I needed. I can still remember how she encouraged me when I was sick, when she herself was seriously sick at the time.

It's hard not to mention Cindy's cooking skill. Her gourmet cuisine was so remarkable every time I dine at her home. She is definitely comparable to a Michelin 3-star chef!

I do really miss Cindy's smiling face, understanding n encouragement.

“ Cindy and Chen Ya have been a source of family cohesion and inspiration for Chen Ya's first cousin Dr Huang Soo Sien (1941-2004) and her family over their entire adult lifetimes. Chen Ya's father, Huang Ying Yung ( 5th brother Mm Ba ) , and Soo Sien's father , Huang Foo Yung(8th brother Ba Suk) , were brothers from a Meixian (Meizhou) Hakka family that lived between Singapore and China , dependent on the political vagaries of the times. What brought them closer together was that Soo Sien and Chen Ya went to Australia about the same time to study medicine, Chen Ya to Sydney and Soo Sien to Adelaide. At about the same time, their cousins, sons of the youngest and 10th brother of their father Huang Kim Yong (Mun Suk) came to Australia as students, Laurence Lam Lung Wong at Sydney university in Engineering and Ben Wong to turn his fortunes in the direction of Business in Darwin, as far as recall goes. Soo's husband, Mark Wahlqvist, met Soo in Medical School. Coincidentally, Chen Ya and Mark, who had both taken time out from medical studies to do Medical Science, at an Australian Physiology and Pharmacology meeting in Melbourne where they each presented their first research papers at Melbourne University. When Soo and Mark Decided to marry in 1967 in Singapore, Chen Ya's father was in Melbourne at a Commonwealth Vice Chancellors meeting and Mark doing his doctorate at Melbourne University in the Department of Physiology and St Vincent's Hospital as a Clinical teacher. Soo's father assigned him to ascertain whether Mark would be a suitable husband. The story goes that when the 2 brothers later met in Singapore to consider the marriage further, Chen Ya was in earshot. Ying Yung told Foo Yung that Mark was suitable and recommended Foo Yung agree to the marriage, but if he did not Soo would marry him anyhow! Professor Huang Ying Yung became the surrogate parental witness to the marriage in Singapore on November 25th, 1967 at St Andrew's Cathedral and the adjacent Adelphi hotel. Chen Ya completed his medical studies in Hong Kong , meeting Cindy there after her epic journey from Northern China.

Chen Ya undertook Neurology training with his mentor Dr Jim Lance in Sydney and further time in Australia with Cindy brought the 4-some closer together, to be joined by Mark and Soos' children (Dr) Ingmar Wei Tzu Wahlqvist and Kerstin Yih Fen Wahlqvist, who have developed a strong bond with Cindy and Chen Ya over the years, whether in Hong Kong or Australia.

When Soo Sien died tragically and unexpectedly of a haemorrhagic stroke on April 29th, 2004, Cindy and Chen Ya proved supportive .to us all. Most memorable and profound for Mark was an evening spent at their Hong Kong apartment to moving readings of Tang Dynasty poetry.

Mark has married again after a career in academic medicine in various places, to a Professor of Public Health in Taipei, Meei-Shyuan Lee. The supportive friendship with Cindy and Chen Ya has continued and flourished with kindred interests in Chinese food, nutrition, and culture. Cindy lives on in our hearts and in whom we are.
