Victor was wise, kind and thoughtful. I was blessed with having him become a good friend over the last four years of our medical degree, to which I can proudly say that we have triumphed together by working through many placements together. His gentle and patient demeanour was expressed through his interactions with patients and those he worked with in all disciplines, not just psychiatry. I very much enjoyed our lunches together where he shared a lot of his personal interests and his opinions; opening a very complex and unbounded mind.

I will never forget the kind and thoughtful words he extended to me when I myself went through a difficult time with the passing of my cousin. It was a busy week, I was spending every moment in the hospital with very little time to grieve and with no support. Victor gave me the time and space for that, and the support I received from him as a friend I will cherish for the rest of my life.

Victor was taken from us too soon, but with an open mind I go forward knowing that he has made me stronger in many ways. He will always be there in loving memory.

Victor was my friend from medicine - we quickly hit it off partly because we both had an interest in psychiatry, but mostly because he was such a likeable, lovely person. Every time I would see him he would take his time to stop and chat and really ask how I was doing, even if it meant we would both be late to where we were supposed to be! He took care of his colleagues in the course and showed a genuine interest in people. I remember after we both did our psychiatry terms, I asked him if the experience had changed him and if he was still interested in the field - he said he was still interested, but that he understood that the people that are going to be good psychiatrists are the ones that would probably find it the hardest to do. I can't remember the exact words that he used (he's much more eloquent than I am!) but the sentiment that he expressed has stuck with me to this day more than a year later. He was truly empathetic and put his whole heart into what he did. That's the kind of person he was, and I am glad to have known him.

Victor was such a kind and gentle person. I remember when we did Orthopedics together and he saw that I was upset one day and he went to the trouble to call me up that night. He said that he did not like to see me upset and wanted to check if I was okay and if there was anything he could do to make me feel better. I was so touched by this phone call.

I also loved working with Victor on the play we put on for the hospital. He did a wonderful French accent. He was so nervous about it during rehearsals, but he did an amazing job and so many people came up to me afterwards and said how funny his performance was.

Miss you lots, Victor. I'm sorry that this happened. You are sorely missed. You would have made such a wonderful doctor. Not only did you know so much science (always asking me incredibly difficult questions, the answers to which I couldn't even find after googling the scientific literature), but you were humble and empathetic and introspective, always considering your actions and words so that you could be a better person every day.

Sending my love to Victor's family and close friends,
Isobel

Victor was an amazing friend who was always able to make me laugh as well as support me through some of my tougher times. I don't think I'll ever forget the memories we made in HK after high school or the banter we had in the car whilst listening to Sun and Moon or the joy of finishing the last ever university exam together. You were a fantastic friend and an even better person. You will be sorely missed buddy.
