“ Hi guys,
Paul and Jessie were so easy going and generous to a fault. We would fly back in to the country after living overseas and there was always a room at their house, a delicious meal and that smile. We started out as friends of Brian and Therese but became theirs too. Most parents would have kicked at stink at these frequent travellers taking over a room and a spot at the table but not them.

My wife Dayna remembers Paul having some damage on the side of the house or roof after a storm. Paul dutifully waited and when the insurance people finally got back to him it was going to be a long wait and a ridiculous cost for their workers to do it. Paul said stuff that I can do that in a quarter of the time for half that much! And he did.

He will be sadly missed.

“ Hi Paul,
After about 65 years, have to say goodbye to you. Get used to know I had a friend called Paul Lo who was a good family man, always having the wellbeing of his family members in mind.

“ *Living in Sydney in the 90s as a regional student new to the city I didn't know many proper adults. Paul and Jessie were the first of my new friends' parents I got to know.
I doubt Paul would have any idea the impact he had on my life. I craved spending time at their house or down at the farm. He had an outlook on life and a way of parenting and relating to young people I hadn't really experienced before. So cruisey and generous and full of stories; capable and optimistic and willing to take a risk.
He made a large impression on me and has been a great influence on how to live a life. I'm glad for those moments I was able to spend with Paul and his family.
Thank you Paul.*
